

Coyotes

By: Jackson Bench

Habitat

Coyotes are very adaptive and can live in most areas, including in towns. They mainly live in Alaska, Canada, America, and Mexico. They like flat lands and prairies. They claim territories that they live and hunt in. They also live in forests spread out across north america. They often ovoid humans and are really skittish.

Piktochart, 3/7/19

Appetite

The coyotes appetite ranges to what there is. for instance they can adapt to most foods. They mainly eat rabbits, birds and, mice, and prairie dogs. They also eat insects, berries and, nuts. rarely the sometimes get in a pack and can bring down elk and deer.

Piktochart, 3/9/19

Behavior

Coyotes can be alone in some times of the year but are mainly in families and are social animals. They are normally shy and skittish towards humans and almost never come in contact with us. They are not friendly to their enemies also try to avoid them too. They get mates by howling contests and the loudest howler wins, the contests sometimes end in a fight that determines who gets the mate.

Piktochart, 3/7/19

Families

Coyotes are very good parents and are very protective. They raise their young Until they are old enough to leave the den and hunt and have a family of their own. The coyotes are born in a den that the mother and cubs live in and the father has a den of his own and he watches closely for anything that might harm his mate or his cubs. He also is prowling his territory and giving his mate meat to help support her cubs. They can have about 2 to 14 cubs.

Pictochart, 3/11/19

colors

Coyotes are beautiful creatures and have a wide range of colors throughout all seasons. the main colors they have are amber colored bellies and gray and black backs. In the winter they are just white and gray with a little yellow.

